

Made in Oregon, the zany new comedy stars Alan Arkin!

Lauren Holly and Glenna Headly also star in "RAISING FLAGG," directed by award-winning
Eugene filmmaker Neal Miller

Directed by Eugene filmmaker Neal Miller and filmed entirely in Oregon, the new motion picture, "RAISING FLAGG," stars Oscar-nominee and Tony Award-winner Alan Arkin in one of his funniest performances since the 1979 madcap hit, "The In-Laws."

In the zany comedy-drama, Arkin plays Flagg Purdy – a man so cranky and quirky that he will never be named Father of the Year. In fact, he's lucky if the kids even visit. Lovable but stubborn to the core, Flagg becomes the victim of his own lofty principles when a minor disagreement erupts into a legal battle that he unexpectedly wins – but at a price he is unprepared to pay. While Flagg drives everyone around him crazy, coping with it all surprisingly turns the Purdy's into a real family – for the first time ever.

“RAISING FLAGG” co-stars an extraordinary ensemble cast for an independent film – including Glenne Headly (the hilarious heiress who gets the best of con artists Michael Caine and Steve Martin in “Dirty Rotten Scoundrels”) and Lauren Holly (the irresistible dumb blonde who drove Jim Carrey into a frenzied long-distance chase in “Dumb & Dumber”).

The production was also features over 25 Northwest actors and was made with the help of more than two dozen Northwest film technicians – including Portland-based Production Designer David Sicotte and Line Producer Julia Cook and Associate Producer Hardy James, an Oregon City resident.

Shot in and around the St. Helens area near Portland, “RAISING FLAGG” was produced by Neal and Nancy Miller, who also co-wrote the screenplay with Dorothy Velasco of Eugene.

Neal Miller has been making independent films since 1976, many of them featured at major film festivals, including Sundance. Along the way, he was responsible for casting Darryl Hannah and Virginia Madsen in their first film roles, pairing Susan Sarandon and Christopher Walken in one of their most celebrated performances, and giving Joanne Woodward the opportunity to direct her first feature-length project.

He and his wife, Nancy, have lived in Eugene since 1989.

For more information, please visit www.RaisingFlagg.com.

* * *